Tommy told me this morning that the lunch he had arranged yesterday between Bourgès-Maunoury and Doug Dillon had apparently gone off [redacted] satisfactorily. He brought me Dillon's message reporting on it.

Tommy is leaving tonight for a week in his native state of Idaho.

Jean-Jacques Servan-Schreiber was to lunch with me today, but has been called to Marly by Mendès-France, so I am to see him tomorrow.

We went down to Versailles, and I motored over to call on the Welles Bosworths, at their house Marietta, near Vaucresson. Welles has lived in France ever since the Rockefellers placed him in charge of their restoration projects at Versailles, about 1920. I must have a portrait of myself for the Embassy, and had a look at such of his brother-in-law, Jean Oberle's, work as was at Marietta. I'm not sure it is the type which the Embassy portrait committee would approve.

Tonight was spent at the Lanterne, Nicky being also there. He is a beguiling child.
